Dear Licensee:

If there were a type of "do no harm" Hippocratic Oath that Alabama lawmakers would swear to abide by, they wouldn't have anything to do with legislation that would weaken state control over the sale of liquor, ultimately leading to higher prices, as well as increased consumption with all of its associated ills.

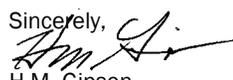

Privatization would force the state to close its revenue-producing ABC liquor stores and terminate more than 600 employees. This would open the door to large, out-of-state corporations that have bankrolled similar measures to dismantle controls in other states to come in and profiteer off of Alabamians. In 2011, for example, one major retailer spent $22 million to get Washington State out of- and it in- the retail liquor business. Experience in other states shows that when the big box stores and chains sell spirits, it is difficult for small package stores to compete. In Washington, many "mom and pop" stores were simply undersold and put out of business.

According to Dr. Keivan Deravi, a well-respected Auburn University at Montgomery economist, privatization would save the state little to no money. In fact, his recent study of privatization of retail spirits in Alabama shows that it is likely the state won't realize any financial gain. Liquor prices would go up, and hundreds of jobs, including the beneficial economic impact of those jobs, would be eliminated. The ABC Board would go from a self-supporting agency to one dependent on funding from an anemic state General Fund. That could affect the agency's ability to enforce state alcohol laws and protect public safety. None of those outcomes can be described as good for Alabama. They hurt responsible consumers, endanger public health, and they are detrimental to state budgets.

Through its efficient operation, the ABC Board provides more than $200 million each year to state and local governments, with money flowing to the General Fund, Department of Human Resources, Department of Mental Health, education, and cities and counties. In fact, since 1937, the ABC Board has generated more than $6 billion for Alabama's governments and agencies.

Control is clearly working for Alabama. Why change it now? Indeed, why, when our state desperately needs stable, dependable revenue sources and Alabamians working and paying taxes, would we take this risk?

In general, control states like Alabama report lower consumption and higher revenue from the sale of alcohol. That's a win-win in my book!

Sincerely,

H.M. Gipson

A PLACE IN THE CROWD

Gin producers have been expanding the variety of their offerings to entice consumers into giving this flavorful spirit a well-earned spot at the table.

BY ROBERT PLOTKIN

Americans are rediscovering the affordable elegance and unrivaled complexity of premium gin. Crafted according to a secret blend of aromatics, every brand is endowed with an engaging personality as individually distinctive as DNA, which explains why no two smell or taste the same. So when gin fanciers say they fancy a particular gin more than the others, believe them.

“Gin is definitely undergoing a reappraisal by trade and consumers,” explains Bob Fowkes, director and cofounder of Brockmans Gin. “First, the craft brewing movement is heightening everyone’s interest in the subject of taste. Gin delivers more favorably in that respect versus say neutral vodka. In addition, the process and recipe story for gin has a greater degree of interest and fascination for consumers. Gin tends to be unique and different and probably resistant to being flavored with cake, bubblegum, and bacon.”

The character differences between the brands lie in how they’re made. The most widely produced type is London Dry Gin, a term that now refers to a style rather than a geographical reference. They’re produced in two stages. First, a fermented mash of cereal grains is distilled in specially designed gin stills. The highly rectified, neutral spirit is then redistilled with the introduction of botanicals.

The exact composition of these aromatic ingredients is a guarded trade secret and essentially distinguishes one premium brand from another. An exceptional gin makes its presence immediately known with an outpouring of fresh, celery-crisp aromas elicited from botanicals such as juniper berries, citrus peels, herbs, roots, and spices.

These are indeed heady days for gin. “We think that boutique spirits are the really hot spirit category,” says August Sebastiani, president of The Other Guys Wine, makers of Uncle Val’s Gin.

The resurgent popularity of the cocktail has prompted the release of many new artisanal brands. “People don’t buy categories, they buy brands,” asserts Thomas Mooney, co-owner and CEO of House Spirits Distillery. “The rise of gin is led by a handful of pioneering brands that have introduced new, more balanced expressions of gin. These growth brands are more mixable, but they also pair well with complex fruit and spice flavors that are not as kind to more traditional gins.”

The resurgent popularity of the cocktail has prompted the release of many new artisanal brands.

CANADA ON THE CUSP

The whiskies from the north are poised for upscaling.

BY JACK ROBERTIELLO

Note: This excerpt is printed with permission from the January/February 2015 issue of StateWays—the Beverage Alcohol Merchandising Magazine for Control States.

CANADIAN WHISKY MAY NOT GET AS MUCH RESPECT AS ITS IRISH, SCOTTISH, AND AMERICAN COUNTERPARTS THESE DAYS, BUT IF WHISKY-BUYING WERE AMERICAN IDOL, CANADIAN WOULD DEFINITELY BE COMPETING IN THE FINALS.

After all, the entire category moved more than 13 million cases in the United States last year, second only to bourbon and Tennessee whiskeys among brown spirits. And while the category has a reputation for lower prices when compared to the other whiskies, the majority of the growth last year came from the super-premium pricing tier, according to figures from the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States.

For years, the Canadian category has been a steady if uninspired participant in the reawakening of interest in whisky. With a tradition that made “smooth,” “mellow,” and “easy” key words for the style of spirit most often associated with whiskies from the North, Canadian wasn’t perfectly aligned with the contemporary taste for more robust or expressive flavor profiles found in American, Irish, and Scottish varieties.

But recent signs of interest, especially by cocktail connoisseurs for the high rye expressions and new consumers for flavored expressions, have encouraged Canadian makers to pay more attention to contemporary tastes. “We all know brown spirits are seeing a big resurgence, and we’re seeing that as well in Canadian,” says Vicki Arcos, brand director for Black Velvet at Constellation. “Bourbon is getting all the attention, but we’re definitely seeing a lot of traction as well.”

Canadian’s reputation has always rested on its smooth and accessible qualities, she notes, and as a category has been reliant on brand-loyal male consumers. But now that flavors are such a huge trend in brown spirits, brands are finding success recruiting users from beer, cider, and vodka—as well as making inroads among female consumers.

“There are a number of trends driving awareness, trial, and growth in the North American space and among Canadian whisky,” says Yvonne Briese, VP of marketing, whiskey for Diageo. “The emerging popularity of flavored whisky was part of the inspiration that led to the innovation of Crown Royal Regal Apple. We feel this trend is a great way for drinkers, both men and women alike, to continue expanding their interests for not only whiskies, but also flavored whiskies.” She adds, “The growing popularity of cocktails among consumers and the resurgence of classics, such as the Manhattan and Old-Fashioned, provide consumers with more options and reasons to responsibly enjoy whiskies.”

Claire Richards, Director of World Whiskies for Beam Suntory (supplier of Canadian Club and Windsor Supreme), says, “This is certainly an exciting time for spirits, especially brown spirits. Brands are experimenting more to create new flavor experiences, and consumers are eager to explore different variants. Canadian whisky has a unique flavor profile due to its rye content, which is attracting a lot of interest from bartenders and consumers as they explore the whisky category.”

One of the reasons Canadian has been lagging the other whiskies in growth may be its modesty, suggests Richard McLeod, Brand Director, North American Whisky for Pernod Ricard. “I think that we have to start beating our chest a little more about our quality, what makes us different, and how we stack up against the rest of the world,” he says. “Globally speaking, over the last 10 to 15 years we have seen [most] of the major whisky producing regions in the world stand up and actively support their whisky export business. It is time for Canada to get involved and show the world that we really do make an incredible liquid as good as any being made by our colleagues in those countries. We have as much flexibility in the maturation and blending process as anyone, which gives us greater freedom to express different taste profiles for the consumer to enjoy.”
